Giclée or Iris Printing

"A computerized reproduction whereby the image and topology are generated from a digital file and printed by a special ink jet printer, using ink, acrylic or oil paints. Giclée printing offers the highest degree of accuracy and richness of color unavailable in other reproduction techniques"¹. The process can be applied to canvas or watercolor paper. We have refined to a high degree the computer and printing equipment, high-resolution color scans, imaging, and storage mediums in the application to canvas and perhaps on watercolor paper. Each image is imprinted with the image / lighthouse name, issue number and name of the pilot / photographer, John L. Wagner, and is accompanied by a signed and numbered "Certificate of Authenticity."

Details

Any image from my extensive files or those appearing in the book, Michigan Lighthouses, An Aerial Photographic Perspective, can be reproduced on canvas. Each, however, must be adapted to the ink on canvas process. This includes cropping and alignment, color correction and balance and proportioning to the final size, imposing the necessary controls to produce a quality product. This is ongoing and approximately 20 are now complete. A list of those completed images is available.

Archival UV Inks

Following are longevity comparisons between our archival UV inks and the standard Encad indoor inks. An independent testing laboratory, Wilhelm Imaging Research, Inc, the preeminent authority on image permanence in the graphic imaging market, conducted these tests.

GtG Archival UV Ink	70-80 years
Encad GS Ink (dye-based)	1-2 years
Encad GA Ink (dye-based)	1-2 years

The data are derived from accelerated fluorescent light fading tests, based on the "standard" indoor display condition of 450 lux for 12 hours per day, employed by Wilhelm Imaging Research. The tests were conducted on photo glossy paper.
